ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

The state of New York has moved to decriminalize cannabis. As of August 28, 2019, it is no longer a crime to be in possession of up to 2 ounces of marijuana. Up to that threshold, it will be treated as a non-criminal violation. Police still have the right to stop and question you regarding this violation; however, if you are a resident of New York and have valid ID you may receive a ticket and corresponding fine—it is up to you to decide if you wish to contest the ticket.

The maximum penalty for possession of the limited amount of marijuana is as follows: up to 1-ounce equals a $50 fine, and up to 2-ounces of marijuana equals a $200 fine. Remember, smoking marijuana in public areas such as offices, bars, and public transit systems violates the public health law. While it is not an arrestable offense, you can still receive a ticket. However, if the amount you possess is above 2-ounces you may be arrested and charged criminally.

Under New York State law, residents still aren't allowed to cultivate marijuana. This means you can't sell, ship, grow and trade marijuana. Under this new law, the term "marijuana" is inclusive of the plant, yes—but also the seeds, resin or oils derived from the plant. Lastly, while the state of New York has made it legal to possess and use medical marijuana when one is a medical marijuana card holder, it is still illegal under federal law.
